Chapter 1 by David Gabrielli

One day, as Bilbo Baggins checks his mail, he comes across a strange red envelope. As he begins to open it, he is transported to the newly built Shockwave, Darth Vaders new ship that can destroy a planet with a simple double A battery. Suddenly, Bilbo slipped on his ring. Vanishing. He had learnt to do that whenever something scared him. And right now he was shaking from fear.

Chapter 3 by -

He is unsure whether is is seeing the evil from his ring's world, or in some ridiculous cage. He can't tell, so he takes the ring off.

"There he is, seize him!" Storm troopers rush forward and grab Bilbo. He is trembling from head to foot.

He is then taken into an empty room to await Darth Vader's coming...

Suddenly, Captain America comes out of the cupcake!

The stormtroopers were quick to rid Bilbo of his possessions as they awaited his interrogation,

Imperial marched into the room. Vader's first words to the hobbit soon followed.

"I find your lack of...technology...disturbing. Where do you come from, small man?"

Bilbo gulped. Fear was sure to garble his words if he were not quick in his thoughts.

"I am Bilbo Baggins of the Shire, and I was looking forward to the most lovely cup of tea-"

"How did you get here?" Vader impatiently snarled.

"Well, you see, I was reading my mail when I found a strange red envelope. It sent me straight here, and I don't know why. Can I have my things returned to me?"

The stormtroopers withheld the Ring from him, and one kept Sting cautiously at his side. Yet, when Vader started laughing amiably, they gave back to Bilbo his possessions, since when a Sith Lord laughs, it usually means trouble.

"Bilbo Baggins, I am altering the deal. I was going to kill you, but since you are such a warm and homely Bald Ewok: join me, and together we will have the most lovely cup of tea!"

Bilbo pondered this deal, and paused for a moment. Then, at great length, he spoke: "I beg your pardon, Dark Knight, but I am a hobbit. I know of no Ewok folk, bald or no, and I can have a cup of tea at home, by the fire, far from any danger. So thank you, but I must go now."

Vader laughed heartily, and the stormtroopers cowered even more, terrified. He summoned from the folds of his cape a small cupcake as he replied to Bilbo.

"Little hobbit," he explained, "I am not a Knight of any kind, and am definitely not a Jedi Knight. The Dark Knight is someone else! I picked him up twelve parsecs ago while completing the Kessel Run. I believe we found him in the Gotham System, and he prefers the name 'Caped Crusader'. No, I am the most powerful Sith Lord in the galaxy, and I invite you to a party. Plus"- here, he offered the cake-"there are various confections available!"

At this, the hobbit nodded approvingly. Cake was not a thing to turn down when offered.
